Looking Sharp ▶

We want to get right to the point, and the point is this blinged-out, arrow-style ear gear. All you need to do is pick up two matching pendants, attach your favorite style of ear wires, and you're ready to go!

Fair Pair ▶

Simple is good, and easy is better—especially when it comes to handmade jewelry. With these elegant gold charms, simple and easy add up to just plain beautiful. Just connect them to the ear wires of your choice, and you're done.

Crystal Clear

Want vintage-style drama? Try layering antique-inspired jewelry components—the more you use, the bigger the impact. We made our statement with pearl cup chain, twinkly crystals and lots of brassy gold chain.

Wrist Rapt

There's more than one way to bling your wrist. Here are three: rhinestone rings, silver spider chain, and a crystal-edged watch face. Just connect the clasp (or the strap) of your choice.

A multi-strand necklace is displayed against a background of layered, torn, light-colored fabric. The necklace features four distinct chain styles: a thick gold-toned oval link chain, a thin gold-toned chain with small clear crystals, a thin gold-toned chain with small clear crystals, and a thin gold-toned chain with small clear crystals. The necklace is adorned with several diamond accents, including a large diamond cluster at the top and two diamond clusters at the bottom. The focal point is a large, intricate floral pendant. It consists of three flowers: a dark bronze flower with a pearl center, a light green flower with a diamond center, and a white flower with a diamond center. The pendant is surrounded by green leaves and small dark flowers.

Be My Bud

A flower focal pendant—the three blooms are one piece—is the power behind this whimsical accessory. The supporting cast features four kinds of chain and two pairs of crystal cup chain connectors.

◀ Cozy Rosie

If your look is classic casual, these dainty gold rose charms will make your heart go flutter-flutter. Not much work to do for this look—just match the glowy gold finish to a pair of ear wires.

◀ Black, White & Right

No need to spend a crafternoon on these snazzy bead stacks. They come as you see them, and they're sold as a pair. Just connect them to some simple ear wires and hit the town swinging.

Sparkle Me

How to turn a sparkle-sparkled cross connector into chic casual wear? Try pairing it with humble waxed thread. You won't even need jewelry pliers for a look like this. It's strictly knot, show and shine!

◀ Diamond Mine

Just a chain will do for a make-it-in-a-flash necklace, as long as it's a chain with plenty of personality. And luckily, this antique-style metal-and-crystal combo has buckets of it. Attach a clasp, and you're good to go.

Dangle Day ▶

Pop this delightful dangly charm pendant on a basic necklace, and it's ready to wear. But here's another way to go: Mix it up a little. We paired a simple curb chain and a fancy metal-meets-crystal number for extra oomph.

Cross My Heart

That one perfect pendant can be key to a wow-inducing necklace. And here's a pendant that's in the running: an ornate silver and gold cross. We placed it on a simple rope chain, and let it shine like it should.

All Around

Sometimes fashion comes full circle. And it's a simple circle in this case: An elegant round pendant hung on a coordinating chain. This piece comes together in a flash (and sans tools) since the chain comes with a clasp already attached.

That's the Spirit

We mixed crystal infinity connectors and stately glass beads to create the perfect necklace for this gorgeous crystal-dotted cross. But the antique-inspired pendant could look just as lovely on a simple silver chain.

Tribal Life

Elegance takes a tribal turn for these subtly sparkled necklaces.

Left: gold and crystal feather pendant on a simple oval-link chain.

Right: dagger charm pendant and handmade crystal-and-bead charms on a ball chain.

◀ Strike a Chord

This hematite lightning bolt pendant is a great way to make an ensemble go pop! Just hang it on a simple coordinating chain. Or try this trick: Twist two chains together for dual-color depth and texture.

To the Wire ▶

A wire-wrapped jewel can add oodles of interest to a set of pretty danglies on a chain. And this particular jewel has a secret: It comes how you see it, so you don't have to wrap it yourself. All you have to do is decide how to wear it.

◀ Chain Gang

Try connecting three chains to one jump ring for a pile-on-the-glam bracelet. These chains come as you see them. We just put them together and added a clasp.

Tip: We didn't go matchy-matchy, but the muted gold finish tied the look together.

◀ Ornate Debate

Priceless antique? Try crazy-easy DIY. This pretty filigree pendant comes with the drop crystal already connected. Just add a chain and a coordinating clasp—and you've got instant vintage, baby!

◀ Be Blue

We made the dainty bead charms for these designs—faceted beads, silver spacers, coordinating bead caps, and headpins. Then we paired them up with a silver chain, some lever-back ear wires, and a stamped circle pendant.

Pleasant Petals ▶

This unique half-flower connector strand is the perfect length for a bracelet. All we had to do for this piece was connect a coordinating silver clasp. Tip: Need a larger size? Extend the strand with the chain of your choice.

▶ Just My Nature

There's no need to spend a day on crafting the perfect bead dangle if you can grab one that's ready to go. This one comes on the end of a brassy flower pendant. We paired it with a ball chain and some coordinating baubles.
