Full Circle

Turn a rustic grapevine wreath tropical with burnt red spray paint and a cluster of cymbidium orchids. Simply clip the shapely blooms from their stems and then hot glue them to the vines. Tip: Try adding subtle greenery for interest. Slender green leaves, used sparingly, are a great way to frame the flowers.

At Vase Value

You've seen traditional orchid arrangements—they're about making a statement with one or two dramatic stems. So if you want to break tradition and go for a more laid-back style, gather an armful of blooms in a clear glass vase. Tip: Unfussiness is key here, so try a faux water kit in the bottom of the vase instead of foam and moss.

arrangement.

A lei made of lavender orchid flowers is draped over a mossy rock. The flowers are a vibrant purple color with darker purple centers. The rock is covered in green moss and is set against a background of green foliage and brown mulch. The text "Lei Day" is written in a white, cursive font in the upper right corner.

Lei Day

Load up on luscious lavender orchid bushes and get happy with a gorgeous handmade lei! To make this island delight, pop the petals from the bush, remove the centers, and string onto clear cording. Knot the ends of the cording together when you have the size you want.

Open Case

Give orchids a chance to do more than clean lines. Let them go absolutely earthy by pairing them with the perfect natural embellishments. Curly vines and lush sheet moss are a great place to start—the trick is to make it look like it all grew together. Tip: We chose these luggage-inspired boxes for their colors as earth tones are ideal for a nature-inspired arrangement.

New Light

Lighten up stately white orchids by displaying them in a rustic metal lantern (available in the Home Accents Department). Start with moss-covered floral foam. Then add orchids—two or three stems for fullness—curly vines and simple greenery, bending and arranging as desired. Tip: For a natural look, let a few blooms poke through the sides of the lantern.
